

The no call list has become a staple in our lives. First, I can eat a meal with my family and my focus stays on the issues of, "How is school, what did you learn and how are your friends". When the phone interrupts during dinner it destroys the family life we work hard to create. Secondly, I am not the kind of customer that makes a purchase over the phone simply because someone calls me. I find them suspect. I believe it is a service to less aware consumers , i.e., the elderly, the less educated, the impaired to continue with the no call list. Please, I urge you to keep the no call list.
